PITCH ANGLES

THE QUESTION THAT REBUILT MY LIFE

A casual conversation in an Apple Store at age 32 became the question that rebuilt the next decade. What questions are we asking ourselves on autopilot? What would change if we replaced them?

WHY MOST PERSONAL DEVELOPMENT FAILS

After working with athletes, executives, and Fortune 500 teams, Chris argues that personal development books fail because they treat behavior, not the questions running underneath behavior. The book is about the operating system, not the apps.

SOCIAL MEDIA, COMPARISON, AND THE WAR ON YOUR MENTAL HEALTH

Why younger generations report more burnout despite fewer external pressures, and what coaches who work with elite performers know about the psychological cost of curated lives.

BIO

Chris Marvel Davis is a coach, speaker, and author whose commentary on leadership, human development, professional athletics, and spiritual growth has been featured on ESPN, Fox Sports, Sports Time Ohio, Yahoo, Huffington Post, and HuffPostLive. He has interviewed Lamar Odom, Terrell Owens, and Lil Rel Howery, and appeared on Earn Your Leisure. As a coach he works with future Hall of Famer Terrell Owens and other professional athletes and entertainers. He has been retained by Johnson and Johnson and Head Start to train their teams. He holds a regular guest spot on Radio One Cleveland and contributes to radio programming nationally. He is a two-time Who's Who in Cleveland honoree. The What If Effect is his new book. He lives in Atlanta with his wife Jazmine and their three sons.

SUGGESTED INTERVIEW QUESTIONS

- 1 Tell us the Apple Store story. What was that conversation, and what shifted after?
- 2 What are most people getting wrong about their own personal development?
- 3 You've coached athletes, trained Fortune 500 teams, and built a company alongside your wife. What is the through-line?
- 4 Why is the question more important than the answer?
- 5 What is the difference between fear that protects you and fear that traps you?
- 6 For someone who feels stuck right now: what is the first move?

STORIES READY TO TELL
