

MEDIA KIT · NEW BOOK

The Pink Lemon

Why Losing Isn't Always What It Looks Like

We use one word for getting beaten, losing by an inch, having something taken, chasing the wrong prize and walking away on purpose. The Pink Lemon pulls those losses apart, so readers stop answering every one of them with the same advice.

AUTHOR	Chris Marvel Davis
RELEASE	November 30, 2026
FORMATS	Paperback and ebook
WHERE	Amazon, plus bookstores and libraries through Ingram
LENGTH	18 chapters, about 140 pages, with full source notes

About the book

There is a variety of Eureka lemon that grows with green-and-cream stripes on the outside and pale pink flesh on the inside. Hand somebody one without explaining, and they would say, "That's a lemon." They would be right. They just wouldn't know everything about what they were holding.

Chris Marvel Davis spent years doing the same thing with losing. Something happened, he named it a loss, and the explanation showed up right behind it: work harder, want it more, prove them wrong. Sometimes that advice was right. A lot of the time it was answering a different problem. The book starts with a Cleveland kid who made his high school baseball team and then lost the season to an injury, and works through sports, business and family life to a simple question: what kind of loss was it?

The Five

1 · Somebody beat you
Study what they actually did, and own your part of it.

2 · The margin was almost random
Don't let a coin-flip result become a verdict on your ability.

3 · Something was taken
Stop searching yourself for a flaw that didn't cause it.

4 · The wrong game
Check whether the rules you're living under are still rules you choose.

5 · You walked out
Tell yourself the truth about the choice, and whether it needs repair.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Chris Marvel Davis

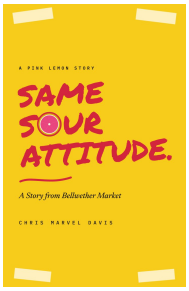

Chris Marvel Davis is a speaker, trainer and the author of The What If Effect. He holds a bachelor's and a master's degree in psychology and has spent more than ten years in front of students, athletes, educators and leaders, talking about performance, pressure and what people do after things go wrong.

He grew up in Cleveland on Indians baseball and library weekends with his dad, and lives in the Atlanta area with his wife, Jazmine, and their three sons.

Interview questions

1. Pink lemons are real. How did a piece of fruit become the frame for a book about losing?
2. What are The Five, and which one do people confuse most often?
3. You made your high school team and then lost the season to an injury. What did that teach you that a loss to a better player couldn't?
4. Why is "they wanted it more" bad advice?
5. Your business hit a goal and started coming apart about 45 days later. What kind of loss was that?
6. How do you talk to your sons about losing without rushing to a lesson?
7. Where does faith fit when a loss doesn't have a clear reason?
8. Can winning be its own kind of problem?

Also from The Pink Lemon

Same Sour Attitude

A Pink Lemon Story. One summer at a neighborhood grocery store, a manager's job opens across town and a box of striped pink lemons arrives the same week. A short work of fiction in twelve chapters. Release date coming soon.

The Pink Lemon Podcast

Chris talks with athletes, coaches, researchers and friends about the losses that shaped them and what kind of L each one really was. First episodes this November.

Speaking

Chris speaks on the ideas in the book for student assemblies, athletic programs, leadership days, graduations and conferences, and travels nationally. Bulk copies of the book can be bundled with a keynote.

BOOKING, INTERVIEWS AND BULK ORDERS ChrisMarvelSpeaks.com

© 2026 Chris Marvel Davis. Cover and author images may be used in coverage of the book.